Investigation into plane crash at hilltop

By Ronald Fanx

Accident investigators yesterday were trying to discover why a twin-engined light aircraft making an approach through cloud to Dundee airport crashed into a hill west of the city. Two men on board died, but four others, including the pilot, survived when the Cessna 310 aircraft hit a 1,000ft heather-covered hilltop. 10 miles north-east of Perth at more than 100 mph.

The survivors spent the night in the open, until a rescue team found them and they were flown by belicopter to hospital in Dundee. Their condition was "satisfactory" yesterday but police and investigating officers were not allowed to question

The pilot of the aircraft, Mr Stuart Palmer, aged 29, of Shobdon, near Hereford, suffered two broken ankles and facial injuries. The Army's human factors: 1

How to fight without sleep

How long can a soldier maintain efficiency with little or no sleep? Are brief cat-naps as valuable as more sustained periods of sleep? The answers to such ques-tions, fascinating in themselves, crucially important for battlefield commanders. As the Falklands conflict neared its climax last year, one of the British commanders' main concerns was for how long the forces ashore could endure the great hardships in which they were living without losing their fighting efficieny.

Establishment, Farnborough in Hampshire, provides information on which commanders can base such judgment. At any time the APRE has about 80 research projects on human factors of the military machine.

Its work ranges from helping to design the most effective internal layout of a tank for the crew, assessing the effects of noise, determining standards of physical fitness, and reviewing officer selection procedures.

In a modern conventional battle which can last a fortnight of more, often in a barsh climate, as in the Falklands, one of the main deprivations will often be loss of sleep. The APRE has been researching that problem for several years. In one experiment three it was found that sleep platoons were engaged on a deprivation affected mental

Prince Andrew describes loneliness and

Prince Andrew described sterday his experiences in the Falklands conflict, including the "horrific" moment when he saw the Atlantic Conveyor de-stroyed by an Exocet missile.

In an interview with David Frost on TV-am, the prince said that he had felt a certain amount of loneliness between his missions as a Royal Navy helicopter pilot.

"You tend to become a sort of zombie. All you do is eat, sleep and fly. I had an awful lot of time to myself, sitting in my cabin and now and then ducking the odd missile.

"The worst thing was actually the destruction of everything," Prince Andrew said.

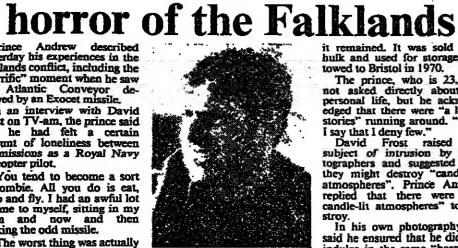

"I saw the Atlantic Conveyor hit, and seeing the bits and pieces that rained around... there were splashes in the water about a quarter of a mile away. "It was an experience I shall never forget. It's still a vivid

Many pubs admitting children, guide says

By a Staff Reporter

Public houses throughout Britain are breaking the law by admitting children into bars, The Good Pub Guide says today.

The guide's editor, Mr Alisdair Aird, says that of more than 1,100 public houses selected for the guide, nearly two thirds admitted children, although by law anyone under 15 is banned from a bar serving alcohol.

The guide, published by the Consumers' Association and Hodder & Stoughton, calls for children to be allowed in at the landlord's discretion, or for the law to be enforced

It says: "In practice, in many places individual publicans allow children (with a respon-sible adult, of course) into virtually any part of the pub. while in other places the police, interpreting and enforcing the law strictly, stop this. Either way, the law should surely have the same effect everywhere"

It criticizes pubs which no longer make sandwiches, "the ideal pub snacks". And it says that the cheapest beer in Britain can be found in Lancashire.

Other places where a pint should not cost much more than 50p are, in order of cheapness, Cheshire, Derbyshire, Staffordshire, Yorkshire, Cumbria, Cornwall, Shropshire, Durham, Leicestershire, Lincolnshire and Nottinghamshire. The most expensive beer is in London.

Four public houses receive the guide's top rating of three stars, meaning that they could not be better. They are the Fleece, Bretforton, Hereford and Worcester, the Three Chimneys, near Biddenden, Kent; the Yew Tree, Cauldon, Staffordshire; and the White Horse, near Petersfield, Hamp-

Queen fulfils a promise and returns to Treetops after 31 years

The royal tour

From Alan Hamilton, Nyeri, Kenya

filled a promise of 31 years ago. She came back to Treetops, where she spent the night of February 5, 1952, blissfully mayare of her father's death at Sandringham.

Her return was more duty tkan pleasure, for the memories it stirred can only have been unhappy. She appeared apprehensive and measy, caring to stay no longer than necessary, arriving 10 minutes late but leaving on time.

The Treetops she knew, a simple hide of three bedrooms giant fig tree overlooking a waterhole, was burnt to the ground by the Man Man in 1954. It has been replaced by a modern 38-bedroomed hotel on stilts. On her last visit, it is recorded, when she stayed awake all night, she saw 47 elephants. Yesterday there were none, only half a dozen warthogs, several baboons, two gazelles leaping with consum-mated grace in the distance, and three prowling Cape buffalo waggling their ears and looking exceedingly nasty.

The Queen spent a few minutes on the hotel roof inspecting the sunlit scene. "Oh look, Philip, buffalo", she said to the Dake of Edinburgh.

The Queen yesterday ful- "Darling, look, he's wallow-lled a promise of 31 years ago. ing". The buffalo proceeded with his bath in the orange muddied waters of the pool, oblivious of the royal gaze.

The Duke of Edinburgh remarked on the absence of trees compared with the thick cover that had clothed the edges of the pool in 1952. The elephants, it was explained to him, had eaten them all, anxious for food to accompany their drink.

The Queen signed the visitors' book and cut a and a chemical toilet set in a commemorative cake, but ignored the brass plaque recording the circumstances of her last visit. She and the Duke were then invited to walk round the pool to the site of the old hide, now no more than a charred stump, so that press and television cameramen, after much negotiation with Palace officials, could capture an historic picture.

> "Oh dear," said the Queen, as she was guided downstairs to the pool. The royal person was guarded and guided past the snares of giant elephant drop-pings by Mr Richard Prickett, a game warden bearing eight bullets and a double-barrelled elephant gun of 1912 vintage, and a small group of soldiers ready to throw stones at anything that came too near, be it buffalo or cameraman.

Of much greater significance than the near-stunt of Treetons was the Queen's arrival in private on Saturday at Sagana Lodge, a beautiful stone and cedar country boase given to her by Kenya as a wedding present, which she handed back at independence in 1963.

It was here, on her return from Treetops, at 2.45 in the afternoon of February 6, 1952, that she learned of her accession to the throne.

She returned to Sagana Lodge 31 years later in the late afternoon to a breathtaking view, as the bonnet of cloud that usually caps Mount Kenya, 20 miles away astride the Equator, drifted aside to reveal the 17,000ft peak in scowy sunlit glory. Sagana has been altered and enlarged, but the Queen was still able to recognize much of it. And she met a gardener who had helped her to plant two trees on her last visit. To mark ber return, she planted another. It was the properly private moment of her return. She and the Duke dined with only a few close members of their household: for a few quiet hours the Kenyan hosts and the press turned their backs on a deeply Honduran and Nicaraguan border guards have fought a nr. gun and mortar battle, the most serious incident yet in a series of exchanges along their 500-mile frontier.

If taking about freedom, one of the themes of the President's Far East tour, is justified anywhere in the world it is in South Korea, and not merely because of the deaths of 269 people in the Korean Airlines Boeing 747, shot down by the Soviet Union, and the Rangoon bombing a little over a month

Hongkong's 5.3 million peopare awaiting the sparse follow the latest round of talks on the colony's future, today and tomorrow. They can only hope for a choice of words which will take away their fears and give them confidence. Last month's two-day session in Peking was described by the British side as "useful and constructive" - the first time that even those cautious words of approval had been used.

More recently Mrs Margaret Thatcher encouraged optimism

by announcing that Britain would insist on a continuing presence after 1997, when China wants to resume control, while Mr Deng Liquin, China's director of information, indicated that Peking would allow Hongkong to continue capitalist economy after that date - at least for some time.

Confidence is important not only for economic reasons, but to prevent a mass exodus from Hongkong should people start to envisage a radical change in their lifestyle. A flow of some funds and people from the colony as 1997 approaches would seem inevitable, but Britain as well as Hongkong itself will want to keep this to a minimum.

The colony's population has grown from a mere 400,000 after the Second World War to its present huge total. But only 20,000 - most of them British expatriates - have United Kingdom passports and a right of abode in this country. A further 2.5 millions, nearly srael is evolving into "a mad and slightly evil country. Perhaps this is the conclusion we can derive from Amos Oz's trips around Israel and the West Bank, and the conversations he had there, in October and November 1982... That was how the Jerusalem Post's Benny Morris began his review of the Hebrew edition of In the land of Israel, the book from which the extracts below are taken. Accordingly, when I went to see Oz at his home, Kibbutz Hulda (south of the main Jerusalem-Tel Aviv highway). I started by asking how he felt about washing this sort of dirty linen in the columns of The Times.

He replied that he did not see the book as "dirty linen" at all. "What I to produce a polyphonic record of present-time Israel, or at least some segments of it, with all its sound and fury and pain. There is nothing of 'dirty linen' in the fact that several Israelis are tormented by the present reality, or by the traumatic past. All three strands of this anti-liberal Zionism are exposed in this book. Yet he disclaims having written it as an in explaining themselves to the outside expose. He presents it more as a work world. of self-education: "Never before had I made an attempt to listen carefully and sympathetically to my worst political opponents, from the PLO to Gush Emunim. This time I made a deliberate effort to give them not only a fair hearing but even a convincing voice: I lent my own voice to those people, who are sometimes not very articulate

So is he happy with the Israel he has discovered? No. "I'm not at all happy with anything in Israel." But, "I suppose down below I'm very proud of the fact that, despite the long Jewish tragedy and the relatively short Israeli tragedy, this country is still one of the most open, argumentative, soul-searching societies in the world. A busqueue or a grocery in Israel is a miniparliament where total strangers dis-cuss vehemently not only politics, but ideology, religion, social justice, sex, theology – and I like it this way in spite of the fact that it hurts."

Is this kind of open, argumentative society not threatened by violence when, as happened in February this year, a person taking part in a peaceful demonstration can be killed with a hand-grenade? Yes, he says. "It is a direct threat to the basic, phuralistic spirit of Israeli society. But still ... in one hundred years of Zionism less than fifty Jews were killed by other Jews for political or ideological reasons. For a much lesser cause than the one which divides the Israelis now, other peoples would probably be at each other's throats quite literally, not metaphorically. What we Israelis do is give each other ulcers - or a heart attack.

Oz says he finds it difficult to prevent "pro-peace intellectuals in the West from hugging me for the wrong Peace Now activist, but stressers that "Peace Now has never been a replica of the American anti-war movement". "No one within the Peace Now movement maintains that the enemy is unreal, that we fundamentally fight the Arabs for the wrong reasons".

He is not, he says, "in love with nation states". Indeed "as a Jew, having a nation-state of my own makes me sometimes feel like an old man in a kindergarten. We Jews have been through that game thousands of years ago, and in a way we have performed for nearly two thousand years what I regard as the ideal model of the existence of a civilization without the murderous toys of nationhood, except that it was a one man show or a onepeople show. Some of the audience applauded, some other part of the audience persecuted the performer, and some slaughtered him...

"I can't afford it. I'd be delighted to be the tenth one in the world or the fifth one in the neighbourhood, to join a post-nationalistic world. But for the life of me I'm not going to be the eternal pioneer of the next phase in human hisory. As long as everyone else: has glass in their windows and locks on their doors, and tanks and aeroplanes, I'm going to play the bloody game according to its bloody rules whether. I like it or not. Or partnerism, rather. Partnerism Or partnerism, rather. Partnerism is prejudice shown against one member of a duo, whereby all the attention goes to the other partner. Take Gilbert and Ellice, for instance. Ellice, the talented composer who occasionally stepped in when Sullivan was having a furious row with Gilbert, is now totally forgotten, although, I believe, the Gilbert and Ellice operetta Happy Easter Island is sometimes revived by amateurs. Or St Pierre et Miquelon - Saint Peter we all know about but Miquelon, the locksmith of the Gates of Heaven, is commemorated only Gates of Heaven, is commemorated only in the name of some French islands. And take Martini and Rossī.

But here we come across one of the great mysteries of history, the forgotten story of Albert Ross, who partnered more people than anyone in history and always ended up as the partner whom no one remembers. He was born in 1879 in Auchterlonely, in Scotland, and grew up with the singular ambition of being a streight man in a music ball duo. Most comics crave to be the funny one, but he physics reckneed that the peryous tension always reckoned that the nervous tension and acrobatics involved in comedy would wear a man ont, and it was as a straight man that he always auditioned.

In his autobiography, he relates how his first auditions were disastrous - he tried to perform solo as-a straight man, the result being less than humorous - but that he soon met up with and partnered Doug Cromarty. Doug was a rollicking dialect comedian who specialized in arriving on stage drunk and performing all the better for it. Ross and Cromarty became well-known at the turn of the century in the Scottish provinces, but the taste in those days was for fake Scotsmen like Harry Lauder, and the act never made it to London.

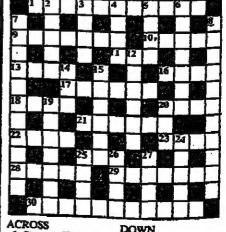

Ross teamed up briefly in Wales with a comic called Harry Wye, but Ross 'n' Wye never caught on beyond lending their name to a town, and Ross went abroad to find his fortune, to Germany and then to Italy. He claims that in Germany he formed half of a team mown as Ross and Kayalier, later turned into a musical by Strauss, but historians privately doubt this. What is beyond doubt is that he teamed up with Signor Martini in Italy as a business partner. Martini had a dry vermouth which he claimed as better than anyone else's but wouldn't sell better. Rossi (as he was known to the Italians) had the simple solution. "Put an olive in it", he said.

It worked, and they made a fortune, Ross stayed with the firm for 10 years, till they got tired of this morose Scotsman standing around telling them to put an olive in it, and he moved on to Ireland, where he teamed up with Somerville and produced the leisurely tales of the Irish R M which Channel 4 were later to immortalize, or at least to televise.

By this time he had acquired a certain reputation as the forgettable half of partnerships (who has ever heard a request for a dry Rossi, or Rossi Bianco?) and it is no coincidence that when Lawrence of Arabia was looking for an anonymous name to enter the forces with, he chose Ross.

He spent his declining years working on his autobiography, trying to analyse the psychological factors which had made him always the lesser half of everything or, in the title of the work, The Ross Dependency. It came as little surprise to him to find later that this was already the name of part of the Antarctic. His whole life had been spent like that. He died of a heart attack when he bought James Thurber's book, The Years with Ross and found it wasn't about him,

It is matched, Bayley points out, by the pink marble hearthstone he had found for the room. Otherwise there is only space for bookshelves, a Sony television on a wall bracket, a lamp suspended from a sweeping arc of chrome, and a

On the desk in a white porcelain vase there are always white flowers. Beneath them is a British Telecom push button telephone, resprayed to Bayley's requirement in quiet dove grey.

"It is the ordinary parrot vomit colour underneath, which I am afraid you can see where it is flaking. The original purity of the design, I feel, has been extensively fouled up by British Telecom. In the age of communications, can you believe that they would provide such a nasty bit of plastic as this?"

At the front of the desk is a spirit level - "alas, you see my desk is not perfectly right" -and a toy model of "the world's most beautiful car - Pininfari-na's Lancia Aurelia B20 GT - in original grey". At Bayley's side is his dark grey electronic typewriter, an Olivetti ET121, "chosen on visual grounds, but it has proved just brilliant and makes the IBM I have at home feel as though it was made by a very primitive tribe".

Illumination comes from a giraffe-necked and tiny-headed black Tizio lamp, designed as an improvement on the angle-poise principle by Richard Sapper for Artemide of Italy. Alan Bennett some time ago took this wispy little fragment and turned it into a typically witty script. Then John Schlesinger, an old friend of Miss Browne, took an interest. The result is An Englishman Abroad, to be shown first at the London Film Festival on November 21 and then og BBC 1 on November 29, a remarkable collaboration between the three of them which brings Schlesinger back to television for the

But, even for such an experienced operator, the three years of struggle have proved exhausting. It is the part of the job he hates. "Since I started in films I've done a number of difficult films I've done a number of difficult subjects and they've all been a problem to set up. You keep asking yourself: Is this ever going to happen? Where am I going to be next week? Which particular begging bowl am I going to be holding out? jaundiced, but he is clearly to optimist about the future of the movie industry. He is sceptical about the supposed renaissance in British films, pointing out that there was not so much as a single British penny in Chariots of Five and that Gandhi took 20 years to get off the ground. The television-linked revival is fair enough but it can only produce lowbudget films and generally local-interest material. For the really big audiences a movie still has to be a real movie. Increasingly, Schlesinger sees Increasingly, Schlesinger sees mainstream cinema being taken over by "fairly meretricious films about nothing". He watched gloomily as two serious movies—Under Fire and The Right Stuff—both opened poorly in America and he still nurses a sadness that his own Yanks, although successful over here, never, really made it in the United States.

All of which made work on An Englishman an unalloyed pleasure. Instead of the fraught marketing considerations of the movie industry he could haveriate in the benignity of the BBC, "You don't have to look the BBC, "You don't have to look over your shoulder and worry too much about who is going to-understand this, or what andience

As if to prove something both to herself and to her audience. Felicity Palmer brought an almost perversely individual set of songs to the Wigmare Hall on Saturday night in a pro-gramme as distinctive and keenly-honed as the mind and voice behind it.
Only those tirelessly dedicated to the indiscriminate pursuit of the neglected, though, can have taken much delight in Rossini's histrionic scena called Giovanna d'Arco: but, just as John Constable artfully avoided the coy in this introduction, so Miss Palmer sliced through the lurid accompanimental colours to build a compelling dramatic Her steely, stordy hybrid of a

Miss Palmer's distinctive Russian repertoire, the most re-warding parts of the evening were provided, not surprisingly perhaps, by French composers whom she understands. Chausson remained a little chill, his supple phrases not clothed quite warmly enough in their own intimate sensuous ness. But Rayel and Poulene carried the day. For the little cryptic, emblematic glimpses of Histoires naturelles in Ravel's bestiary, Miss Palmer found the perfect distance and tone of voice, hovering on the borders of silence in "Le Grillon" and verbally pointing at once the whim and the wonder of "Le Martin-Pecheur" In La Courte Paille the subtle

PUBLISHING Unequal partners

What surprised authors was that Fay Weldon's Booker Prize speech last month should have received the publicity it did and caused so much grashing of teeth in the publishing com-munity. It said little, if anything revolutionary or new about the relationship between writers and publishers. What took publishers aback was that a leading novelist should have broken ranks (in the presence of the Minister for the Aris, too) and bitten the hands that feeds authors. For the ridiculous, obstinate truth is that pubfishers - with few, honourable expections - are brainwashed into believing that they are mainly responsible for the success or failure of the writers.
They publish, and that their authors not only should, but do, love them. If that is really so then something must have happened in recent years that is new to the history of publishing: Paradoxically, authors wish that publishers were responsible for their well-being in the sense that, if their manuscripts are accepted for publication, they would like to believe (the novice author still does) that everything humanely and pro-fessionally possible will be done to edit, design, manufacture, promote and market the books in each country in which the publisher has the right to sell the unique product, an author's There would still be authors

if there were no publishers. That is manuscripts would continue to be written, even if they had to be distributed in Samizdat form. Literature would not stop. To declare that: if there were no authors there would be no publishers, that the gargantuan British publishing ndustry would have to find a different means of livelihood, is both self-evident and fautastics.

1. Yet Clive Bradley chief executive of the Publishers Association (whose current president is Philip Attenbo-rough of Hodder & Stoughton, Fay Weldon's publishers), was quoted after the Booker Prize dinner by PHS as saying that the occasion is usually a time when we celebrate the merits of English literature", which was exactly what Mrs Weldon's speech did, if taken in full as it should be. What Mr. Brandley meant what Mr Brandley meant, and also the publishers who, bismpiship cadorsed his realists, was that the Booker tinner is "usually a time when we celebrate the merits of English publishing". At the expense of Booker McConnell publishers annually toast themselves and the books - not difficult authors - they have been clever enough to publish.

The British book trace has colossal problems to contend. with at present, and they should not be belittled. Too many titles are brought out, resulting in necessally of the "best" or most literary books. Then there are piracy, photocopying the price of British printing inefficient distribution, the under capitalization of bookshops, decreasing public library purchase funds and so on. Yet the fundamental problem, the state of affairs between authors and publishers, is the one that too many pubishers choose to treat as if it does not exist. Clive Bradley enlarged upon his comments to PHS in a letter to The Times, published on November 4. Mr Bradley, who is no fool and therefore must. have a reason for saying so, declared that the Publishers. Association has maintained frequent and invariably friendly relationships with the authors' organizations". Sugerficially this may be true but it is not how the office-bearers and secretaries of the Society of Authors and the Writers' Guild would put it. Why does Mr Bradley think, for instance, that the authors' organizations were driven to devise a minimum terms contract for their mem-Of course authors need publishers. Of course they want them, desperately, to be their friends as well as their employers because a constant, creative dialogue between author and editor-publisher is essential. Of course editors should obtain satisfaction from working with authors and seeing books put before the public in as near to perfect form as realizable. But the publisher truly has to believe that his partner in the enterprise is the author, and that the author must continually be consulted and given information about the progress of his manuscript from delivery of raw material to publication of polished artifact. Publishers at any time have many books on their lists, any one of which - if it hits the jackpot - may keep them in caviare, the vast majority of authors at any time have only one. It is disingenuous of Mr Bradley to state that "no one is forced to sign a contract on terms they don't like". Every author in the country is, unless he is involved in every stage of the publishing process and stands to receive a proper percentage of the profits. The publisher may have put up his own or someone's capital. The author has provided his unique expertise, even genius.

ation of that role (in which they take turns) looks fine. Dowell moves expressively, brings out the strength and tragedy of the man, also his humour and exploring mind, and always commands the action. So how o account for the fact that Nureyev's performance has twice as much life and truth in I think it is a question of the emotional weight he gives it, the sense of passionately caring about the education of Miranda and Caliban (Stephen Jefferies was new and lasciviously convincing in that role), of exulting in his tricks, sympa-thizing with his creatures even when he loaths them, accepting but resenting the claims of his dukedom. This is a performance worthy of Shakespeare, even though the need to cram so much plot into 50 minutes sometimes makes the action for the other characters prosaic.

Philharmonia/ Roxburgh Barbican

To judge from the pitiful beginning to lose patience with the Philharmonia's Music of Today series. If there is any point at all in such an endeavour, then there are two functions at least that it ought to be serving. First, it should be using the Du Maurier funding to perform works of the very highest quality. Second, itshould be providing a testing ground, from which the most successful performances could go forward to the more public arena of the orchestra's regular concerts. As far as I am aware, that has never once happened. With all possible respect to

Edwin Roxburgh and Tim Souster, the two composers featured in this latest programme, it could scarcely be argued that their works represent what is most challenging beautiful, new, interesting or remarkable in the orchestral music of the past decade. Mr Roxburgh presided. He did so like an Anglican priest distributing blithe bonkomie to the faithful few, which was fair

Why the rich are appy when it rains.

Time was when a drop of rain cast a shadow of gloom on the Heaton-Smythes' social life.

在1000年,1000

But the Fisher Home Entertainment Centre, with 18" high definition colour television, 9 day record VHS video, a full range of stereo components including twin cassette deck, and CD Digital Audio Player has changed their way of thinking.

"Oh joy, Daphne, rain. Let's stay in with the Fisher."

Of course, the unlimited pleasure possibilities of the Fisher unit do present a few problems.

"Elsie Tanner, video re-runs of us at the Royal Wedding, Nöel Coward recordings. Wogan, your Johnny Kotten tape, or the Peer Gynt Suite, Rodders?"

Reassuringly, whatever their choice, they'll have access to the finest equipment available.

For instance, the colour TV. has been precision engineered to deliver sharp picture definition right through to the screen's corners. And it features a 17 function remote control and direct video input.

The 615 VHS video has the facility to record up to 4 hours on an E-240 cassette, picture search functions like cue, review, freeze frame, and 9 function wired remote control.

And though Daphne Heaton-Smythe thinks "Wow" and "Flutter" are two dogs in the local hunt, her husband more sensibly realises the sound performance of Fisher high-fidelity is quite exceptional.

The system has outstanding features like direct-drive turntable, soft touch controls, 3-way speakers, and quartz locked synthesizer. It also boasts a twin deck cassette player with Dolby B and C and a stereo amplifier with graphic equalizer and an impressive 40 watts RMS.

Of course, the pièce de résistance is the CD Digital Audio Player with soft touch controls, 16 selection programme memory, and forward and reverse track selection.

You can start with a complete Fisher Hi-Fi system for as little as £299. But considering the Fisher Home Entertainment Centre offers so many components, a price of around £1,800 really isn't out of the question. Particularly, when one thinks of the amount of rain in Britain.

The trouble is, the barge is manned by TGWU men who, like their employers, would like their union to do something for those who want London's river to work, instead of turning the old blind eye to the inactivities of those who want to make it a lazy backwater.

Why taxes must be cut

by Graham Mather

The Government has forgotten, if it ever themselves with little bargaining power for high priority: an attack of forgetfulness capable of proving fatal to its entire medium-term financial strategy.

Before 1979, every Conservative knew why tax cuts were important. They were the means towards, and the desirable end of, sound economic policy - incentive to, and reward for, personal endeavour; encouragement of enterprise, thrift and initiative; stimulus to savings and investment and hence growth.

Evidence from other industrial economies showed that tax-cutting did result in higher economic growth, more productive invest-ment, and improved productivity and competitiveness.

Conservatives understood why taxes have not been cut significantly so far. Supply-side policies clearly involved unacceptable risks, as budgetary deficits have demonstrated. Shifting to indirect taxation had worrying short-term inflationary consequences. Setwould end up like a truant in front ting over-ambitious targets - 25p in the pound income-tax basic rate - could not itself exert sufficient leverage on spending ministers to pull their bids down.

Yet accommodation to these realities has left Treasury ministers unequipped with a convincing rationale of the central role of lower taxation to engender the economic growth which alone can provide for better social provision. They have in consequence lost the debate on levels of public spending; disappointed their business supporters, of whom 78 per cent recently surveyed put cutting taxes as a high priority; and left really knew, why it regards cutting taxes as a next year's spending round. They have accepted John Biffen's approach to two year's "consolidation", faute de mieux.

Further powerful evidence that tax cuts work has now arrived in a World Bank staff working paper.

Its conclusion is based on the record, between 1970 and 1979, of 20 countries compared against each other and paired into high and low tax regimes. Sometimes the difference of tax revenue as a percentage of gross domestic product was sharp - Japan's 11 per cent against Sweden's 31 per cent; sometimes less so - Cameroon's 15 per cent against Liberia's 21 per cent; Britain (30 per cent) was examined against Spain (19 per cent). The results were consistent.

The average unweighted annual rate of growth of gdp was 7.3 per cent in the low tax group and 1.1 per cent in the high tax group. very single member of the low tax category, including three in Africa, exceeded the economic growth of the most rapidly expanding economy in the high tax category.

Employment (outside agriculture) in low tax countries rose by an annual average of 5 per cent compared with a 0.1 per cent decline in high tax countries.

Gross domestic investment grew by 8.9 per cent a year in the low tax areas, but saw an annual 0.8 per cent decline in high tax ones. In all but one of the low tax nations examined, "higher rates of economic growth allowed an expansion of the tax base which generated increased revenues which financed more rapid expansion of expenditure on government services such as defence, health and education", the report

Of course, low tax countries tend to be developing from a lower economic base than our own. But the field test identified in the recent admirable lecture by Sir John Hoskyns, Mrs Thatcher's former policy adviser, is inescapable: economies like Britain's with public spending around 45 per cent of gdp must compete against newly industrialized countries at 25-30 per cent with low taxes, basic welfare provision in case of real need only, and unprivileged trades unions. They have rapidly rising living standards and low unemployment. Democracy costs money and they will soon have more of it than we do", Sir John warned. How could Mrs Thatcher disagree?

If, prompted by the World Bank, she could remember why cutting taxes was so particularly important, not only would the struggle against protectionism and the need to continue to restructure British industry come more clearly into focus in British economic policy. But she could tell Norman Fowler just why it is that the public debate on the size, structure and future of state health and benefit provision needs to include the desirability of tax-cutting to generate growth. And she could tell the Confederation of British Industry, on good authority, that economic growth can be achieved through her present policies.

She could tell the 78 per cent of businessmen who said tax cuts were a high priority that she understands their message. The author is head of the Institute of Directors'

David Hewson questions the attempts to impose impartiality

Balance, TV's eternal victim

Impartiality is television's greatest commidrum; the more words that are written about it, the more impen-etrable the subject becomes.

Tomorrow, that veteran foe of America, John Pilger of the Daily Mirror, will return to the fray, this time in the cause of Nicaragua. His last programme, The Truth Game, brought about an intervention by the Independent Broadcasting Authority, which demanded that its arguments about attitudes to nuclear war should be "balanced" by those of a journalist from the opposing end of the spectrum, Max Hastings. No such demands were made about tomorrow's programme. Pilg-er, whose opinions about the IBA are blunt - "its principal purpose is censorship" - believes he is treading on safer ground when making programmes on foreign subjects. "It was when it was at home and about nuclear war that they intervened. If Max Hastings had made a documentary on nuclear war do you think they would have insisted that John Pilger of the Daily Mirror should have been brought in to make a balancing programme?" he

Many people would find this attitude somewhat ungrateful. Since his TV debut in the 1960s, Pilger has produced up to two highly personal doucmentaries a year. The style, like tomorrow's on Nicaragna. that of the old campaigning Mirror: simplistic, blatantly partial, and skilfully manipulative towards the emotions of its audience.

"How impoverished, how helpless does a country have to be before is is no longer seen as a threat by the United States?" Pilger asks ingenuously after recounting the mis-deeds of the American-backed Somoza regime, and the utopian ideals of its successors. It is an effective technique, if not a subtle

Viewed against the programme on Nicaragua produced by BBC's Newsnight this weekend, which was equally as critical of American policy but far less blinkered in its approach to the Sandinistas, Pilger's report looks naive and selective in its content. Whatever viewers think of it tomorrow night, there is no Pilger's assertion that the current doubt that Pilger's misgivings are rules on balance are incomprehenstatus quo.

If Glencross hoped that this would put an end to the argument, he has been disappointed. Few broadcasters would now argue with the broadcasting community on the question of impartiality.

unwillingness of right-wing programme makers to offer their wares.

If there is a consensus within broadcasting on the subject of impartiality, it is probably that the rules regarding balance should be relaxed for all current affairs programmes, except during general elections, and on the scheduled news broadcasts. A minority of opinion would like to see impartiality rules scrapped altogether, and points to the fact that the televising of Parliament would make nonsense of rules on fair treatment of all the practical problems of balancing, or correcting, a television news frem are immense. While the Press Council may be much maligned, at least its adjudications are usually seen by those people who read the original reports which prompted them. The same cannot be said of the Broadcasting Complaints Commission, which is still struggling to establish itself as the television Television current affairs, particularly of the sort epitomized by the Pilger programmes, are more con-cerned with image than content, and view emotions more favourably than the minutiae of detail. Documentary directors are not strangers to the theatricality of realism; it is no coincidence that one of Pilger's former collaborators went on to direct Return of the Jedi, since television, even in current affairs, is never far from show business.

But is there not good reason to believe that television, as a medium, is chronically unsuited to the notion of impartiality althogether, except in the rigid form of editorial diktat? The idea of balance is one which came from newspapers. The press is delayed?

In any case, the most popular, perhaps even the most influential part of television carries no mandated allegiance to editorial balance. No one demands, for instance, that the obvious anti-medical bias of the Channel 4 series The Nation's Health should be balanced by an ITV version of the all-caring doctors and nurses of BBC's Angels series.

If there can be a free-for-all in the marketplace of television drama, which makes up the most popular part of the broadcasting constitu-ency, can a loosening of the reins on news and current affairs be long

The Falklands factor that won't go away

A political scientist who looks more like a university professor than a polished diplomat. Senor Dante Caputo was virtually unknown in Buenos Aires until he was named by President-elect Raul Alfonsin last week as Argentina's new foreign minister.

Although he will not take office until December 10 - when Sr Alfonsin is sworn in - Sr Caputo and a team of advisers are already formulating policy on such sensitive issues as the future of the Falklands and Argentina's simmering border dispute with Chile.

He said in an interview: "Argentine diplomacy will no longer be the make-up that hides the face of dictatorship. We will use all diplomatic means at our disposal to bring abour negotiations to solve the Malvinas dispute. That is a pri-

Asked if he thought the US would lift its embargo on weapons sales to Argentina, Sr Caputo replied: "If they want to lift their embargo, they can go ahead and lift it, but buying weapons is not one of our priorities."

White collars ripe for the wooing

Last week's proceedings of the CBI are perplexing to anyone raised in the robust convention of the Labour movement that the first duty of a trade union is to represent the interests of its members. Here we have a collective organization purporting to represent the interests of British industry meeting at a time when the fortunes of those indus-tries have experienced a decline of truly historic proportions, and yet the nearest it can bring itself to calling on the Government to assist is to ask for "flexibility".

It is possible to say many things. about the monetarist experiment of the past four years. It is certainly possible to maintain that the financial institutions have done well out of it. Indeed at one level device for transferring resources from the industrial to the financial interest rates and an overvalued exchange rate.

It is simply not possible to maintain with a straight face that monetarism has been good for industry. Four years after the experiment began manufacturing output is still a sixth below its starting point, a collapse without precedent in the records of output ince the industrial revolution.

Imports of manufactured goods now exceed British exports of manufactured goods for the first time since the Tudors.

The puritan tradition that we achieve salvation through suffering still retains a potent appeal to British psychology, and in some quarters recital of the pain inflicted by monetarism appears merely to heighten confidence that it will deliver us into the promised land of high productivity and nil inflation.

The CBI has no excuse for sharing such misplaced faith. Barely a week before its conference it unveiled, its most recent industrial survey which showed that both export orders and investment intentions had taken another dip. In the wake of such figures it is perhaps not surprising that the most vigorous speech denouncing "flexibility" (and pre-sumably endorsing rigidity) came not from an industrialist but from a

Nor can the CBI even plead guilty to neglecting the objective interests of its members, but enter in mitigation that it was defending their subjective perceptions. This will not wash thanks to the British Institute of Management which last month unveiled the results of its ORC survey of managers. One hundred per cent of the sample described the past two years as difficult to one degree of another: not one opted for the response that times had not been difficult.

Asked to identify the greatest barrier to export sales, the largest number plumped for the high exchange rate. Asked how government could best help industry, the second largest requested that it "inject more money into the economy". Far from lending support to the poses struck at the CBI conference, these results approximate much more closely to Labour's strategy for economic recovery.

They also chime in with the constituency experience of any MP with much industry left, as I know from a recent visit to the British factory of an American multinational, a contemporary edifice of tinted glass still surrounded by

The factory produces medical goods for use in hospitals. The first preoccupation of production management is their anxiety about the cuts in public expenditure which are hitting their market. Unlike the CBI and the Chancellor, Nigel Lawson, they do not see the rolling back of the public sector as an opportunity for expansion, but as another pressure for contraction.

Their second anxiety is the threat from cheap imports. The two topics are intimately related, because hospital procurement officers con-fronted with an arbitrary cut in their budget have no alternative but to buy the cheapest.

Frequently the cheapest will also be the least effective, lasting the shortest time, having the highest proportion of defective items, and in the occasional spectacular case proving to be contaminated. These however are secondary considerations to a procurement officer whose remit is to achieve an immediate cut in invoices.

The priorities of line management find no echo in the prejudices aired at the CBI, but they are neatly mirrored in Labour's policy objectives of using public expenditure to stimulate industrial output and to plan procurement to encourage import substitution rather than import penetration. Moreover, these are not the soberly suited men with homogenized accents from the finance departments. They are frequently men who come from the shop floor and remain in contact with it. They are one section of the upwardly mobile to whom Labour now addresses its messag And there is one neglected but fascinating statistic which suggests they could be won. Among those manufacturing firms which have survived since 1979 there has been a big drop in the number declaring a donation to the Tory party. Of every five firms who made such a donation in 1979, two made no donation in 1982.

Although the chairman may still be allowed out to the CBI conference to indulge in a spot of loyalist rhetoric, back at the mill there are people with a shrewd appreciation of what has been done to them and who did it. The author is Labour MP for

Anne Sofer

Have they got you on an ist list?

We politicians, at a loss for a handy bit of invective to hurl at our opponents, are increasingly turning to the useful suffix "-ist".

It is amazingly versatile. For a start, it can be tacked on to the end of an ordinary political adjective to give it a flavour of something altogether more sinister and dis-creditable. Thus, "leftist" in the mouth of Mr Reagan recently, and "rightist" as it might come from, say, Mr Hattersley, do more than simply describe a position on the political map: we are led to believe that an insidious and fanatical tendency is at work.

Peter Tatchell, in his book The Battle for Bermondsey, which I have just finished reading, uses the words "Labourist" and "City-boss Labourism" as terms of abuse against his right-wing enemies. But my favour-ite epithet in this category is "workerist" - the word used by the Labour left to describe those middle-class comrades even further to the left who have deliberately assumed working-class accents and life styles. There must, I feel, be an equivalent at the other end of the

Another use of "-ist" is its attachment to the names of famous or infamous politicians to sum up a political philosophy and style. It seems that only communist or French leaders acquire this prestige (Stalinist, Maoist, Gaullist ...). Otherwise, political stars acquire only the slightly insulting "-ite", with its implication of grouple or camp-follower (Bennite, Thatcherite, McCarthyite...). Most of our more distinguished politicians this century (and all our prime ministers except Mrs Thatcher) have completed their careers without either "-ists" or "-ites": did Lloyd George or Attlee or Macmillan need them?

I am as guilty as anyone else: checking back through recent articles I find I have used the terms "fantasist" and "purist" in ways meant to discredit ideas I dislike. But at least I have not gone further and used one of the even more poisonous suffixes. A "Trotskyist" may be bad enough but nothing like as threatening as a "Trotskyoid" - a term I encountered recently among left-wing non-Trotskyist socialists. ("-oid" has a great potential: what about "Thatcheroid" for John Selwyn Gummer and his ilk? Ilk, of course is a useful word too.) .

But the greatest exploitation of ist" as a term of abuse lies in that sex and so on) and you have today.

GLC/ILEA for Camden, St Pancres. can bear to be thought prejudiced.

Take, for instance, the great row we had at County Hall last week about the new appointments to the London Transport Board. What had happened was that Ken Livingstone, despite assurances last summer that any new appointments to the board would have the approval not only of the chairman but of all political parties on the council, had persuaded his own party (decidedly leftist, not to say confrontationoid) none the less to steam ahead and make two blatantly political appointments. That one of them was a black 25-year-old female resulted in the Labour Party having a field day with our protests.

"Racist, sexist, agist" they chan-ted and screamed in reverberating crescendo. (And, of course, the fact that we objected even more strongly to the other appointment - of a white, middle-aged man - cut no ice

But the guilt-fired "isms" do not end there. Apart from "classism", (a useful phrase to describe almost any social attitude one does not approve of) there is "hetero-sexism", i.e. the biased attitudes heterosexuals have towards homosexuals. I have recently discovered that "heterose-xism awareness classes" are avail-able for those conscious of their own prejudices and seeking help in eradicating them.

Unfortunately, although all this is useful political ammunition, its effect on the wider community can be counter-productive. Although I now find "sexism" and "racism" tripping off the tongue quite easily, I know of others - long-standing fighters for racial and sexual equality of many years standing, and people who know full well the deep-seated who know has went are deep-seated nature of prejudice — who recoil from the language, the revivalist flavour, the message of "You may think you're saved, but you're not unless you come foward at one of our meetings and confess".

Besides, it can lead to appalling difficulties of definition. My local paper last week reported that the film specially chosen to launch Camden's "Anti-Racist Year" was halted amid fierce protests that far from being anti-racist it was deeply racist - and sexist to boot. Fierce fighting over its screening is reported to be continuing among various left-wing groups.

Almost any great idea can be trivialized and corrupted by letting politicians grab a monopoly of it and I fear that what the suffragettes and civil rights campaigners started great gold-mine of guilt-generation, earlier this century (and what men social prejudice. Tack "-ist" on to and women in other countries are the end of an emotive word (race, dying for) is running that risk here politics which is too often left out of rational calculations. The Falklands war was full of symbol. Here was an island people - British to the core invaded by the forces of a Fascist dictatorship. A British Armada sailed from ports which had for centuries witnessed the Royal Navy slipping out on the tide to fight other unseen wars far from home. Against all expectations, certainly in Buenos Aires and most probably elsewhere in the world, these symbols enabled the idea of the operation to be sustained during weeks of diplomacy.

It was a triumph of collective imagination over the uncertainty of the result, and explained why the operation attracted such colossal and cumulative support which was evidence of the national will, though, in its undramatic quality, in vivid contrast to the scenes of hysteria which could be observed in Argentina. That there was something rotten about the state of Argentina, which lay at the heart of the Falklands invasion, was clear to all however much shouting and parading there was. Symbols were important then, and they are important now in Argentina. A moment of history has arrived with the recent election result which we in Britain should not ignore. There is a danger that the British Government will show a tragic insensitivity if it does not recognize this moment and respond to it.

For the first time since the early 1930s Argentina's political system has a completeness about it based on the possibility of two political parties - the radicals and the Peronists - giving substance to an alternating system of government with civilian control over the military. Hitherto, at least since Peron's arrival in 1946, the choice has lain basically between Peronism and militarism.

The militarization of the Argentine political establishment is based on six coups since 1930 and has become more deeply rooted than ever since 1976. Consequently an entire political generation in Argentina has suffered from this contagion of the military in politics, from which no party leader has been immune with the exception of Senor Alfonsin himself. The new President has never held any kind of government post under Argentina's tainted system.

The very fact of Senor Alfonsin's election registers a statement by the Argentines which goes far beyond the statements he has made, or can yet make, himself. Yet even he has made it clear that the military will be put back in its place. Senior officers responsible for the dark past of Argentina's counter-terror will be arraigned; high spending of even the post-Falklands period will be reversed; inter-service rivalries will be dealt with.

These tasks will not be easy. Britain should welcome that they are being attempted at all. The

She knows desperate attempt to bolster the army's waning prestige in the hope that a victory would excuse the past excesses in a general she can rely on Washington not to sell weapons which would gravely alter the balance of power round the Falklands, not mood of patriotic euphoria. That longing for some palpable symbol of patriotism remains only just below the surface in Argentina, a society of immigrants without a common past. They have only been able to unite behind the rhetoric of the Malvinas crusade because they have been unable reconciled with Washington, and, in view of the resumption to capture anything more complete about their national unity. of civilian control over the If Britain could be certain that military, the ending of the the Argentine system could be made "coup proof" we could be equally certain that, given patient diplomacy and open dealing, our differences with Argentina over the Falklands would never lead to another invasion, even if they could not be fully and finally resolved.

We cannot object to a civilian government laying a rival claim to territory to which we believe we have the better title, provided that claim is not pursued by military means. The whole essence of a conversation between governments which share respect for democratic procedures and for the rule of law is that they talk through their differences, easing those which are capable of compromise, and isolating those which are incapable of resolution, so that the residue does not need to become politically intolerable.

At the United Nations today there will be the annual call for negotiations to start between Argentina and the United Kingdom. The experience with the Junta in its pre-war and post-war phases showed that it was not capable of negotiation. However, that should not apply to a civilian administration under Señor Alfonsin whose legitimacy, and therefore freedom of manoeuvre, is much greater.

The Junta was incapable of declaring a cessation of hostilities. Señor Alfonsin has tina's leaders can go to the already avowed an intention to Falklands the more likely they settle the dispute peacefully. As are to see that the issue itself long as Argentina remained should not be a central one in under military rule Britain has had no option but to carry on the planned defence of the Falkland Islands and the development of institutional government for opments in Falklanders, Of course there is as a whole. no guarantee that Argentina will remain "coup proof". The military in two or three years may of civilian rule in Buenos Aires have recovered its morale and its and take steps which should help discipline. The Alfonsin govern- to consolidate the new-found ment may be unpopular, given the enormous and painful tasks of reconstruction which face it. It is all the more important, therefore, that Britain shows that it is easier to talk to a civilian government about the Falkland Islands than it was or would be with a military one, so that never again can the Argentina military use the Falklands issue as an democratically inspired Argenargument to legitimize its own claim to power and to discredit a civilian government through apparent lack of patriotism.

What should happen with the

From Professor Hugh Lloyd-Jones, Sir, Your issue (Spectrum, November 11) contains an account of the scheme recommended by the Dover Committee, by means of which the University of Oxford proposes to give better opportunities to applicants for entry from state schools by abandoning the requirement that each candidate shall take an entrance examination. It is alleged entrance examination. It is alleged that the examination has not proved a reliable means of predicting the candidates' success or failure. But the chief value and purpose of the examination has been to guarantee that schools, both state and private, maintained a certain academic standard.

American experience shows that as soon as such requirements are abolished, as they have been in the United States, where candidates must be judged by the results of a national testing agency, a gradual but marked decline in the quality of the intake and of the academic the intake and of the academic standard of the universities is likely to result.

Beyond all doubt, the result of admitting candidates without even this test has been a disastrous decline in many state and city universities, so that attempts are in Buenos Aires, other than in now being made slowly to restore the requirements that professors in their liberal enthusiasm had been eager to relax.

The new scheme at Oxford has been approved because members of the faculty feel guilty at the thought that entry has been easier for some people than for others, and wish to ensure that what they would call "social justice" would prevail. The same issue of The Times contains also a powerful article in which Professor Friedrich von Hayek shows how the term "social" has been misapplied, and how there can be no "social justice", but only justice between individual persons. The new system will harm individual persons and the country as a whole by diminishing the quality of the education that all entrants will FOLGIVE. Only by the pursuit of excellence can our finances or our studies prosper, and Oxford is living up to its name as the home of lost causes when it adopts this scheme a few months after the country as a whole has strongly reaffirmed its belief in the value of competition in the pursuit of excellence.

The new scheme is the work of honourable men and women, legislating for the world not as it is but as they would wish it to be, and eager to escape the guilty feeling of belonging to an elitist institution in doing so, they have committed a trahison des ciercs which seems to me to make them far more guilty. I am, Sir, yours faithfully, HUGH LLOYD-JONES, Regius Professor of Greek, Christ Church, Oxford. November II.

New health board

From Lord Young of Dartington Sir, Your report (November 7) that the Royal College of Nursing is pressing for the inclusion of the Chief Nursing Officer on the new Health Services Supervisory Board highlights one of the main weaknesses of the Griffiths proposals. It is surely risking yet another great disorganization in the NHS to introduce a managerial plan without the cooperation of the nurses, the doctors or the patients.

Mr Griffiths had soft words to say about the consumer interest in his report ("A very great deal of importance is attached to ensuring that the views of the community at all levels are taken into account in any decision."), but where in the organization of the supervisory board, or in any other part of the proposals, is there acceptance of the need for consumers to sit around the table with the others? Yours faithfully,

YOUNG OF DARTINGTON.

Housing in Barnet From Councillor John Perry

Sir, May I please put the record straight, at least as far as one matter is concerned in your report (October 29) of Mrs Thatcher's visit to a sheltered housing scheme in East Finchley.

As Chairman of Barnet Housing Committee I sought the support of Mrs Thatcher, the local MP, in gaining as large as possible a housing investment programme allocation from central Government for 1984-85. In support of this I pointed out that to date, i.e. with only seven months of the current financial year gone, Barnet's capital expenditure on housing was at such a level that if all other housing authorities were spending as efficiently, then the Government need have fewer worries about a capital underspend-ing nationally.

To date, in the current financial year, Barnet has already spent over 85 per cent of its housing capital allocation for 1983-84. Yours faithfully. JOHN PERRY, Chairman, Housing Committee, London Borough of Barnet, Members' Room, Town Hall, Hendon, NW4. November 8.

Political stability in Northern Ireland

since 1974 have made no serious effort to enter into dialogue with the representatives of the Catholic minority, while the SDLP, under John Hume, has looked towards

Dublin rather than London for a solution - as witness the present new Ireland Forum. However, there is a new and important factor. The danger that with continuing econo-mic decline young unemployed

Catholics coming on the electoral register will support the Sinn Fein extremists rather than the SDLP is all too real and was too lightly dismissed in your leading article. (The analogy with the 1950s is unrealistic, the economic situation was far more favourable then.)

The next electoral test will be the European elections of 1984, If Sinn

Fein can bridge the gap between the 13.4 per cent of the poll which it secured in the Westminster election last June and the 17.9 per cent of the SDLP the situation will be dangerous indeed. To-day's Irish Times (November 11) carries a report from its usually well-informed London correspondent of a recent private meeting of Conservative MPs which was warned by the Secretary of State, Mr Prior, that if Sinn Fein superseded the SDLP as the representatives of "a majority of the minority", then Northern Ireland could become ungovernable and he could foresee the whole of Ireland developing into "a Cuba off our west realities of the situation than Mr

Powell's ravings about plots between

These fears might seem exagger

From Professor Cornelius O'Leary

Sir, Apart from your cautiously optimistic leading article (November 7), the recent Thatcher-Fitz-Gerald meeting passed without much notice in The Times. The general attitude seems to be that relations between the British and Irish governments are restored to their pre-Falklands friendliness, and that there will be no significant change in government policy towards Northern Ireland. Plainly a new initiative in this province is very low in the list of priorities of the present British Government.

From the vantage point of Belfast
the situation looks very different.
Although the violence has diminished in recent years, the economic decline which it helped generate has continued unabated. The overall unemployment rate has not fallen below 20 per cent for over a year; it is currently 21.5 per cent in the whole province and 40 per cent in the worst "black spot", the Catholic town of Strabane. Moreover, the manufacturing sector, on which the prosperity of the province was built, has declined from 177,000 people in 1970 to 95,000 in 1983.

To give the Northern Ireland Office its due, it has engaged (through its agencies) in expensive promotional drives in Great Britain, the US and West Germany. The reaction from the business com-munity in each has been uniform: Northern Ireland cannot expect the fresh investment it so desperately needs until political stability is restored. (Indeed, in recent years there has been considerably more investment by British firms in the Irish Republic than in Northern Ireland.) Political stability can only be restored through agreement between the representatives of the two main groups in the Community, such as Lord Whitelaw achieved - against all the conventional wisdom of the time - exactly 10 years ago. The most important fact about the power-sharing executive led by the late Brian Faulkner and Gerry Fitt between January and May 1974 was not that it failed - through circumstances outside its control -but that it happened at all. Since it did happen, no one can say that a similar arrangement could not be made in the future. The present attitude among Ulster politicians on both sides is un-

From Mr G. J. Bonwick

Sir, I have followed with interest the correspondence in your columns on Gibraltar shipping. Mr A. K. Canepa, Minister of Economic Development and Trade, Gibraltar, (October 13), was ill-advised to place so much reliance for ship safety on classification societies which are, of course non-profit making commercial organizations.

It is important to appreciate that these societies are not concerned in any way with ship personnel or manning standards. Ship safety is the responsibility of the state whose flag a vessel flies and it cannot escape this by delegation. If a state cannot provide or guarantee the necessary administration, supervision and technical expertise, it should not get in the ship regis-

From Mr George G. Brown Sir, Maintenance is an indivisible part of the marriage vow: "With this ring I thee wed . . . and with all my wordly goods I thee endow", and a vow of mutual support is included in the Alternative Service Book.

The Bill proposes to remove the Aim governing the provision of maintenance, that is it proposes to remove upon divorce the aim of placing the parties in the financial position they would have been in, if the marriage had not broken down. as far as it is practicable. The Bill states no aim of any sort.

This change in the law of maintenance inevitably alters the concept of marriage, it alters both maintenance and marriage from a contract for life into a contract terminable at will. Since I believe that marriage is the basis of society, I believe that an important principle is endangered. Yours sincerely, GEORGE G. BROWN, 2 King's Bench Walk, Temple, EC4.

From Mr Robin Maxwell-Hyslop, MP For Tiverton (Conservative) Sir, It was necessary for Mr Russell Johnston (feature, November 10) to remind us that he had been a Member of Parliament for (is it?) 19 years, since that is far from obvious from his complaint in your columns. Nor was it only the Speaker who followed this entirely reasonable practice. The BBC never had a National Liberal MP as well as a Conservative MP on a programme. In all those years, I never heard Mr Johnston rise to protest against the iniquity of such a course, nor did your columns reverberate to the strains of his indignation. Above their station

From Mr Robin Hanbury-Tenison Sir, Well over 20,000 Cornishmen will want to know the reason why British Rail have chosen their county in which to perpetrate an act of quite exceptional stupidity. Without warning or consultation Bodmin Road station has had its name arbitrarily changed to Bodmin Parkway.

The reason, it appears, is that people will then know they can park there. They might as well change Paddington Clampway.

Overnight dazzling, and presumably expensive, new signs went up last weekend, but it will be at least a year before all the timetables are changed, let alone the writing paper of the local residents, the station's main users.

May I appeal to British Rail to repaint all the signs in Bodmin

Road's proper name?

The money saved by not having to make further changes to publicity material etc could perhaps be spent in upgrading the public lavatories at the station, which are still not suitable for disabled people. Yours faithfully,

Not only auditors are affected; within the last few months your own columns have carried advertisements for solicitors to head the legal departments of two (apparently medium-sized) development com-panies at salaries in the £35,000 -£45,000 range. By contrast, the post of City Solicitor of Birmingham (the biggest district authority in England was recently advertised in the £24,000 - £25,000 range. Most senior local government officers would welcome the disciplines and salaries of the private sector. But perhaps one may be forgiven for wondering how privatis-ation of professional services and increased Government control (pace the Audit Commission) are expected to achieve savings.

Lead needed by church on remarriage

By Clifford Longley, Religious Affairs Correspondent

The Church of England's grumpy and grudging accept. ance of the remarriage of divorced people provides the worst possible climate for the introduction, due in only a few best of a bad job; and the is that hishops should lead their clergy towards greater expertise in matters of human sexual expectations aroused should not relationship. They could do be let down. Neither were worse than to recommend to months, of a most important pastoral instrument.

It has, now the General Synod has revised it, a system for regulating remarriage that is full of beneficial potential for the church and for society. The success or failure of it depends on whether the climate in the church can change quickly enough and far enough to make a virtue of what has been done.

If it continues to be treated as reluctant concession or unsuppy compromise society in general is certain to see the Church of England as weak and pathetic, unable to stand up for the principles that divorce is forbidden by the Gospel, yet miserly in its treatment of those cases it disapprovingly allows. There is another possibility: that the church has an opportunity to teach what Christian marriage really is, and to take a warm message of health and healing to those who have suffered the dire misfortune of matrimonial breakdown matrimonial breakdown.

The only way the bulk of Anglican opinion is ever likely to welcome the new system would be if it were sold as a positively good thing, a chance to minister to a section of the population, very much in need of spiritual succour, which has so far been unreachable. Then the good would outweigh whatever bad there is in it, and even enthusiasm becomes possible. Applicants for the new system could be positively encouraged, the clergy could take delight in each new case, and could revel in the opportunity it gave for intimate human contact with people looking for guidance. the features of human behaviour at separation and divorce are the product of the release of destructive forces which are by then well out of control.

It means little to make moral judgments about how well (or badly) the two individuals coped with those forces, for the marriage was already looking for submerged rocks on which has founder. Such an insight as to founder. Such an insight as that would change very considerably how clergymen handled that part of the procedure which requires them to investigate the past marriage and the circumstances of its ending. Otherwise they will be mistaking symptoms for causes.

The real meaning of the new procedures in the church's armoury of pastoral weapons is the deep comfort, reassurance, solace, and liberation from the past that it can bring. It is not far fetched to suppose that those who so through the process will feel profoundly grateful that it was available to them, and even for the Anglican processes to become sought-after, and those who go through them to be envied. But if that is to happen, there would have first to be a radical change of tone, within

Change in the odds with Goldsmith back in town

Investment in gaming companies which rely for their profits on roulette and blackjack has lost its attractions over the past three years. Casinos owned by Playboy, Coral and Ladbroke were swept away in the cleaning carried out by the Gaming Board and the Metropolitan Police at the turn of the decade.

Attempts to win back lost gaming licences met with stiff opposition. Licensing justices were not persuaded that a change in visible executives necessarily meant a change in practices which had led to the withdrawal of licences in the first

Today the Unlisted Securities Market will see the debut of Aspinall Holdings, which combines the charisma of Mr John Aspinall and the business acumen of Sir James Goldsmith. The deeper significance of Aspinall's flotation should not be lost. Sir James is back to the London business scene which he pointedly left when he took Cavenham Foods into private

I do not imagine that the sharp Goldsmith eye and diamond brilliant commercial mind will be concentrated solely on the fortunes of one gaming company. Who knows, he may even revive his former passion for newspapers.

The Monopolies Commission may use the Pleasurama merger to say something more about the structure of the casino industry, particularly in London, which accounts for almost three-quarters of the total turnover in Britain.

Since the 1979 cleanup campaign, the number of London casinos has dropped by a third while the amount of money handed over for gambling chips has jumped by a third. For the survivors the pickings are rich.

To regain more than speculative appeal in the City, the companies it must demonstrate an ability to sustain high management standards. Meanwhile, Aspinall's offer's a rare event in the USM, for sale, should turn out a stag's delight.

With a market quotation in place, Aspinall has already attracted rumours that it might be about to make a deal or be the subject itself of an instant takeover bid. Such gossip is common with new issues but the industry could take the merger route to sort itself out.

How feasible that is will become clearer this week with the expected publication of the Monopolies Commission report dealing with the merger between Pleasurama and Trident. Trident, with the astute Lord Hanson at the top, is now organizing itself to depend largely on profits from the Clermont Club and the Victoria Sporting

Gower revised and radical

Professor Laurence Gower's epic report on Investor Protection is complete. Its central, and most critical section is the choics Professor Gower believes the Government must make between setting up a full American style Securities and Exchange Commisson and a revamped version of his original proposals for selfregulatory bodies answerable to a beefedup Council for the Securities Industry working in harness with the Department of Trade and Industry.

Anyone operating in the investment ngustry who was not a member of one of the self-regulatory bodies would be required to register with the department.

Professor Gower is against any exceptions to the regulations the Government will make. Financial journalists for example, who provide investment advice would have to be registered. He has however dropped the idea both of making merchant banks responsible for the activities of high street investment

Professor Gower has also stepped back from his original ambition to ban all doorstep selling of financial products.

Lobbying by the insurance industry has it seems, convinced him that this would be too Draconian.

His proposal will probably be a selfadministered licensing system with the insurance companies themselves vetting salesmen and insisting on minimum standards of competence before granting a

The biggest disappointment in the report will be the absence of recommendations for a comprehensive compen-

This was not strictly within his remit but he is unlikely to let this opportunity pass without some reference to the inadequacy of the trust laws under which the funds at present

US bonds regain their momentum

The US bond markets know that there is not going to be any for a couple of years. They believe they are going to have to fight to get rid of it. Admittedly, real bond yields are unpre-cedented – about 7 per cent when measured against in-flation over the last year, But that is not enough. The bond market needs happy facts to keep it going.

These facts emerged from the 16 billion US treasury auctions, which went well. Yields declined slightly. There was plenty of money available to buy the government paper.

Mebon, which has grown partly on the back of the North Sea oil industry, seems the sort of candidate for which the USM was created. ready for exploitation. Their basic message is that their paints cost much more than the average do-it-yourself variety. But they last a lot longer, even under the most demanding conditions.

Mebon, which once briefly dabbled in film finance and commodity trading, expects to make at least £800,000 in its current year. This would com-pare with £585,000. The company's profit record is a little erratic but the trend is derteminedly upwards. When they started, Messrs Meakin and Bourne were backed by a family trust. It pumped in just £10,000. The trust sold in 1977 for £750,000. Repeating such a performance will almost certainly prove too daunting, but Mebon, with its rewarding part of the paints industry, looks set for further progress.

Dealings are expected to start today in the Michael Page Partnership, specializing in accountancy and financial re-cruitment. Stockbroker Phillips & Drew has placed shares at

Consolidated financial position at June 30, 1983

At its meeting of November 9, 1983, the Board examined the consolidated financial statements of the Total Group at June 30, 1983 (figures given in millions

	1st Half 1982	1st Half 1983
Sales	61,534	68.538
Cash Flow	1.646	2.821
Depreciation and Provisions	3.516	3.604

—CFP Share —1.359 —Minority Interests —511		—376 —407
inventory incidence (estimated) Cash Flow excluding	600	5 00
Inventory incidence	1.046	3.321

The net loss recorded is in part a result of inadequate prices on the oil markets and in part a result of the negative inventory incidence consequent on the fall in crude oil prices that occurred during the first half.

Cash flow and the net result are determined by the FIFO method as in previous years. The inventory incidence calculated on the cost of replacing tonnage sold is negative and estimated at minus 500 million francs. Cash flow excluding inventory incidence thus calculated is then 3.3 billion francs.

Furthermore, considerable stock drawdowns of 2.2 million tons reduced the value of Group inventories from 25.9 billion francs to 20.5 billion francs. No profit was recorded on this drawing down, as would have been the case if a LIFO method had been applied from the outset. Application of the FIFO method has in previous years led to a revaluing of inventories and therefore generated book inventory profits which increased the Group's balance sheet net worth, without indicating the portion of net worth attributable to these It is not necessary therefore to record a profit on stock drawdowns which would then have to be offset by recovery of a provision to an equal amount taken

Net exchange losses recorded in the income statement amount to 221 million francs. This amount includes on the one hand the exchange transaction results of CFP-Parent Company and of the various subsidiaries which are positive, and on the other, a loss of 600 million francs resulting from translation into french francs of the debts of the Group's various foreign subsidiaries which are expressed in the currency of account of these subsidiaries. Conversely, translation into french francs of the assets of these foreign subsidiaries showed a monetary appreciation of 1400 million francs which is not recorded in income but increases by as much shareholders' equity on the Group's balance sheet.

The disposal in June of interests in Ato Chimie and Chloe Chimie to the Elf Aquitaine Group resulted in the removal of these interests from the consolidated financial statements and in a net loss of 134 million francs which is included in first half results.

Net investments amounted to 2.9 billion francs against 3.5 billion francs for first half 1982, and 8.2 billion for all of 1982. It should be observed that during first half 1983 the figure for net investments neighbours on that for

Horizon slips in the holiday price war

The price war in package holidays still has some way to go. The question is: Which companies are most likely to

Among the top half dozen tour operators, in terms of Stock Exchange exposure, Horizon Travel and Intasun Leisure are most under pressure. Others ostensibly are cushioned because they are part of a bigger organization.

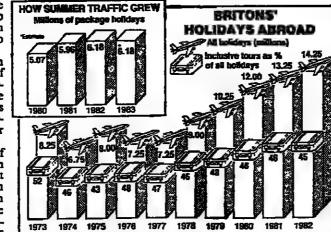

Thomson Holidays is part of the Thomson group although an increasingly important profit contributor, it is the same with Global, part of GUS: British Airways is behind operators like Enterprise and Sovereign, although privatization prospects conceivably add pressure to maintain profits; and Cosmos has its ambilical links with Liechtenstein,

It is Thomson, with Mr John MacNeill in the driving seat, which has been most aggressive so far with traditionally upmarket holidays. This summer it has been generally competitive on price with Intasun, traditionally the main seller on lower prices. A reprint brochure with even lower prices is likely from Thomson next month Intasun coming in with its unpublished 1984 main brochure even as late as the first few days in January.

Allowance needs to be made. therefore, for tactics in that particular poker game when assessing what combatants have to say, but Harry Goodman, Intasun's forceful chairman, said, somewhat uncharacteristically: "Thomson may beat us on price. But we would then be a close second. Horizon could face dropping substantially to Horizon has been slow to match the competition of Thomson and Intasun and among the big operators has consequently suffered the most. Mr Bruce Tanner, Horizon's chairman, admits his margins are "a litle lower" and that although turnover in the current financial year is slightly up on annual comparison, profits are down. A crucial factor with Horizon is the way it uses its airline. Orion. Some 85 per cent of its carryings are Horizon holidaymakers. There is an obvious problem when the holidays operation loses its way as it has this summer.

Horizon has at last taken steps to diversify its holiday product. Its average holiday price, because of the product mix involving more upmarket holidays, has been running at £270 (these are Horizon's figures). Now it has launched a

Horizon looks like a takeover target

Although Horizon is nearer to matching the price-cutters, and still like Thomson has an option to reprint its 1984 brochure, it is starting to look like a takeover target. Intasun has for some time been trying to drive its image more upmarket by improving quality control but the argument for Intasun being interested eventually in Horizon is that it could more quickly give Intasun a bigger slice of the upper tiers of the market.

In the game of brochure bluff more than £14m last time.

Mr Tanner says guardedly the currently dealt the hand of a 6 gure will be in excess of $10m. per cent interim discount on its 1983 brochure offering. Mr

Goodman said: "If we took a 6 per cent drop in prices and there was also no growth for us then our profit margins would be hit, probably by 2 to 3 per cent. But we only need 5 to 6 per cent growth in the main intasun product - less than we achieved this year - to hit 20 per cent

The 6 per cent off gambit by 30,000 package holidays, only 5 per cent of Intasun's projected carryings. Mr Goodman said: "So we lose some bookings - so what? We will pick it all up in January. The question mark over growth for the group as a whole,

Intasm is whether it will cut its prices not by 6 per cent but by 10 to 12 per cent, as some in the trade expect. That might affect profits less than one might think, Intasun is still increasing the range of products, and is gearing up subsidiary operations like Lancaster Holidays and Club 18/30. Lower prices should raise volumes on the

It would be easy to nominate possible bidders for Horizon. Only last week Grand Metropolitan added to its travel interests by buying up Travelscene, big in short-break continental holidays. Bass has also been extending its travel inter-

Markets await an unlikely change

The behaviour of the dollar in the foreign exchange markets is confounding most observers. About this time in 1981, 1982 and again this year, the consensus forecast in the foreign exchange markets has been that there would be a substantial fall in the value of the dollar because of the deterioration in the US current account. The Deutschemark rose from 2.70 early in September to almost 2.50 by mid-October but is now back to about 2.70. Since the dollar really took off in 1978-1979, it has risen over 50 per cent against the Deutschemark, 40 per cent against the Swiss franc, 30 per cent against the yen and the pound.

Yet, the US current account has deteriorated sharply since 1981. Then, the current account showed a surplus of $5 billion. with a deficit on the trade account of $40 billion. Now it is estimated to show a deficit of approximately $40 billion, with the trade balance $70 billion in deficit.

Moreover, the almost universal expectation is that the trade balance will worsen further next year perhaps to a deficit of 100 billion and with an overall current account deficit of 60

The fact that the dollar has remained so strong suggests that

Expectation is that the trade balance will worsen

other more fundamental forces are at work in the system.

During the second half of the last decade there was a strong movement on the part of central banks and private asset holders to diversify away from the dollar. The proportion of Deutsche-marks and yen rose strongly over this period.

But now the philosophy of reserve asset diversification is much less prevalent. Dollars as a percentage of international reserves have risen strongly, and in the Eurodollar market the position has been totally reversed.

Reserves of developing countries are falling, as are those of Opec nations. In addition, for the first time in its history, the rate of growth of the Eurodollar market has come to a virtual

The world's trading currency: is the dollar and dollar assets are the most liquid of all in the international money markets.

The New York government securities and bank deposit markets have a liquidity which is unmatched in any other markets except the United Kingdom.

The consequence is that when an asset holder experiences falling reserves, there appears to be a tendency to sell non-dollar assets first using dollars as the base line of defence.

What does this mean for the international financial system? The system was on a dollar standard from the Second World War until the late 1960s It was a dollar standard within the context of basically fixed exchange rates which was overtaken by floring exchange

The question is whether the united states can continue to finance the content of the conte finance its current account deficit with case and whether the dollar can continue to remain strong. Two forces are pailing in opposite directions. One group of observers argues that the US much worse before the other dollar has to fall.

But if the Eurodollar market negative growth, if reserves in general grow at a modest rate, and if Opec nations continue to run balance of payments deficits, there is every reason to expect a further concentration of international reserves into dollars.

If the second argument is correct, it means that the US

Such continued strength of the dollar could act as a longerterm damper on economic growth in Western European authorities to lower interest rates because they fear of seeing their currencies will fall even farther.

Murrayfield is witness to a gripping case of 'not proven'

New Zealand .

In Scotland there is a legal verdict to suit Saturday's game at Murray-field not proven. It has always struck me as an unsatisfactory verdict, just as a drawn game is unsatisfactory. New Zealand, twice with a discernible advantage, were unable to build on it, Scotland, clawing their way back, were not cuite good enough to overtake them.

Extending the legal metaphor, New Zealand, like an impassioned defence lawyer pleading his case before the jury retires, provided a maximum exhibition of rugby in the last two minutes to try to smatch victory. That, and the try tally of three to one in the All Blacks' favour, is what lingers in the mind from a match in which New Zealand scored two goals, a try and Zealand scored two goals, a try and three penalty goals to a try, five penalties and two dropped goals have we moaned when brilliant British backs have scored the tries, yet the villainous opposition has kicked the goals and won. The boot is on the other foot now; yet one can understand why. New Zealanders may feel he has it in for them; two years ago he refereed their only defeat on tour in Romania and France, and on Saturday the reasons for his ons - or lack of them were not always apparent. New Zealand's best source of possession, untidy though much of it was, came from the lineout. In the loose they were baffled by the closequarters work of Cuthbertson and Calder. Their frustration showed in the number of foolish penalties they conceded, and Dods punished them

The frustration also extended to the front rows where Aitken and Crichton were at odds, and in an uncharacteristic incident late in the game when Wilson gratuitously trod on Laidlaw's ankle as the scrum baif was picking himself up after a Rutherford dropped two short range goals and Dods kicked three penalties in the first half Deane kicked two penalties and a conversion to Fraser's try. Shaw supported and Fraser, for all the world as though he. risser, for all the world as though he was heading for his favourite corner in Wellington, kicked over Dods and easily won the touch down.

At 16-9 the All Blacks were in charge. At 16-15 they were not, Fraser scored his second try, again after a kick and chase, from an opportunity furnished by Donald and Hobbs. Deans converted, and New Zealand were two scores snaw New Zealand were two scores away again. Indiscipline pulled them back. Dods kicked two penalies. Deans another before Cuthbertson won a lineout. Johnston's subsequent kick was a thing of beauty and Pollock touched down. Dods's

All Black discipline on the line

The match at Murrayheld could be said to have turned on the decision in injury time which turned a kickable penalty to New Zealand into a penalty to Scotland – though had New Zealand accepted two possible try-sorring chances earlier in the game, it might have proved irrelevant to the result, (David Hands writes).

New Zealand's coach, Bryce Rope, and captain, Sta Wilson, seem to be of the opinion that touch judges have no business to be involved in decisions on foul play. They further chain that Fraser, who had scored two encellent tries, was unjustly penalized for "intent", when it looked to most of us that the funi, such as it was, in retallation for a tackle comsulted by a dummy pass, here, showed without any shade of doubt that a pack cannot do without a core of hardened veterans. In this respect Squire, Norster and Graham Price were sorely missed. Nobody wants to emasculate a hard game which the All Blacks have always played harder the analysme, but for Rope to say he cannot coach a team to cope with the decisions of line judges is beside the point. The intention is that they should detect foul play, and if that affects the result, then players will presumably be subsequently more cautious.

It cannot be an exaggeration to During the first 20 minutes the pressure on the Welsh was overwhelming. They managed to cross the line into Romanian territory only after 15 minutes. tralis held France to a 15-15 draw in the first of their internationals here, yesterday. The sides meet again in Panis next Saturday.

It was a hard physical, forward confrontation with neither side able to bring their talented backs into the game, but the Australians must have been pleased to held the French after losing their last two games against provincial sides.

Lescarboura, stand-off half, back in the French XV after missing last season's five nations' tournament through injury; countibated 12 of the French points, with three penalties and a dropped goal.

Gallion, having settled his dispute with the selectous, was also back at scraim half after a three-year absence. He looked an improvement on other Franch-scraim halves of the last couple of seasons, although he put in only one of his famous breaks from the acrom.

Australia caught the French by stripaise at the start. Mark Ella, captain, dropped a goal after only three minutes after the French lost possession in a rock.

Latitud, one of three new caps in the French side, increased the lead to 9-3 with a dropped goal after 23 minutes. Then Hillhouse reduced the deficit with a penalty. After the interval Roche scored the only try of the match, converted by Campese.

Lescarboura pulled France back into the game after Roche's by with a penalty on the hour and then an enormous dropped goal from the halfway line. But just as the French appeared to be getting the upper hand. Hawker drupped his goal after justing with the ball after a scrum 20 metres out in front of the poats.

Both sides bore little resemblance to the teams that last met in Sydney two years ago. France had eleven changes from that 24-14 defeat and

Of course it is right for players to have a view on referces' or unipires could only grantile about the referee and touch judges while pretending act to.

There is a tendency in all sports these days for players to complain about the rules, the relevance of which they knew before they sharted, when they believe events have good gaingt them. There were other such instances over the weekend in tennis administrations. But how agoing the other way, with performers looking not for rules which might improve the game but the avoidance of rules which inhibit their excesses.

Connors, you will remember, refused to appear some several years ago at the Wimbledon Centre Court parade of champions because he was knocking up. No sport should be ananipulated by the wishes of players shaply because they happen to be currently at the top. In too many instances these days it is unfortunately a good reason not to listen to them.

unfortunately a good reason not to listen to them.

Where would we all be if we allowed our judgment to be ruled by Brian Clough? Yesterday he was busily publishing in a Sunday newspaper, presumably for money under his signature, the text of a petulast letter to Ted Croker, written only three days previously: a juntaposition which invites speculation as to the purpose of the first in relation to the second.

Clough was allegedly annoyed by such as it was, in retainment and tackle composited by a dummy pass, was hardly severe.

Certainly the referee was not the best, yet the only reason teach judges have been brought into disciplinary prominence is that there is regretably a need for it in an often violent game where the single referee cannot see everything. If he saw Murray Mexind stamping in a ruck, he missed Best Anderson's ruck, he missed Best Anderson's in relation to the second.

Clough was allegedly annoyed by the FA' letter to him, which politely suggested that public comments by him - that he would have liked to kick one of his own players, Hodge, for time wasting - did not enhance the image of the game. Not the most terrible thing Clough has ever done, to be sure, but a letter from the FA with good intentions.

In his reply Clough abuses Croker, and claims that he should be left to control the best interests of Hodge while learning his trade with me; thereby missing the point that the FA are concerned not with Hodge but with Cloub. It must be Hodge but with Clough. It must be hoped that Hodge will in time learn that while his employer may know a great deal about football, he is less than the best sutherity on tact and

Day the game was glorious again

Joe Fagan's opening statement was startling. After climbing the stairs to White Hart Lane's press room, and arriving breathless with enthusiasm, he described the game as "one of the best I've ever been assiciated with". That is some claim, bearing in mind he has been at Liverpool for over 25 years.

Yet it would have been disappoint-ing if he had said anything else. So what if there was the odd mistake here and there? Stevens might have been at fault for Loverpool's first goal and Clemence for their second; in turn, Grobbelaar might have prevented Tottenham's first and Kennedy, who conceded a penalty, their second.

But to examine defensive frailties on such an afternoon is to miss the point. Fagan encapsulated it when he admitted: "We couldn't do anything" about Hoodle in the first half. He could have followed Arsenal's example: last Wednesday they doused Tottenham's brightest flame by throwing a blanket called Robson over him in the Milk

Peter Withe is so quintessentially an English forward that any discussion about whether he shold represent his country quickly gets lost in question of whether the national team should play in the English or continental style. You might just as well compare the virtues of cornflakes with museli or red letter boxes with yello

However, putting aside stereo-typed notions of Withe-as-buildog, blustering his way past the scheming German or Italian, it is possible to see him for what he is, a player with an impressive scoring record - at any rate in the first divsion - but whose natural ability is

Newcastle United

If Kevin Keegan had any illusions netropolis this season to promote his claims for a return to the ngland squad, they ended up being as obliterated as Newcastle's hope of setting a club record of seven successive wins. A large proportion of Chelsea's biggest crowd of the season must have been attracted by Keegan but they left talking not of the little former England man and his indifferent contribution but of one even slighter figure who will surely one day play for Scotland.

The way Pat Nevin accelerates past opponents in the true Scottish tradition of the great "tanner ba" player is the hallmark of genius. It was when the £90,000 close-season purchase from Clyde set off from near the left-back position to beat countless challenges on his way to the byeline just before half-time that Nevin provided a memory more abiding than any of Chelsea's goals.

With almost the entire crowd willing him to score, he was eventually forced out too wide, his final chip being too high for the waiting Dixon. It was a breathtaking moment in a breathless match: one that some older observers ranked with Hughic Gallagher or those of lesser years with Charlie Cooke or Jimmy Greaves, all once illustrious

Wallace has a shock at Pittodrie

By Hugh Taylor

Even a crusade as zealous as Jock Wallace in his pursuit of lost fbrox glory must have been appalled at the magnitude of the task which confronts him as he watched Rangers slump to humiliating defeat at the hands of the league leaders abordeen at Pittordrie. The new Rangers manager goes off for a brief break in Spain today but thoughts of Saturday's depressing display and visions of what might happen at forox next Saturday when cham-Ibrox next Saturday when cham-pions Dundee United come visiting are unlikely to allow him a holiday of bliss.

were so obviously outclassed by Aberdeen that even the thousan of visiting supporters, who turned out in force to welcome the return of their favourite son. Wallace realised that their opponents were in a merciful mood and could have easily obtained more than the goals, all of stunning quality, scored by Simpson, Hewitt and Porteous.

Wallace, however, was calm, if not over-optimistic, after emergeing from a long dressing room post-mortem: "Of course there is a lot of work to be done and a new pattern to be formulated" he said. He has warned his players, nevertheless, that they will have to be quick learners. And there can be little doubt that dramatic changes will have to be made at ibrox, for the vast gulf between the teams at Pittordrie revealed that the present Rangers players do not have the class to restore the club's badly damaged prestige. More than an Inspirational new manager is required if the Rangers slump is to be halted. This was their row and they have been pluned into their bottom place, ironically above Wallace's former team, Motherwell, with only a goal difference.

Aberdeen are playing with the skill and resolution which won them an award last week as Europe's best team and their comfortable win enables them to retain their Premier division leadership; but Dundee United served notice that they are determined to hold onto their title. Triumph and tragedy hand in hand

National Hunt racing were surely never better illustrated than on Saturday. While Pounentes was giving his owner and trainer, Billy McGhie, the thrill of a lifetime by winning the Mackeson Gold Cup at Ckelten Mackeson Gold Cup at Ckelten who also knew the horse well when he was trained by Gordon ham, those closely associated with that top-class hurdler, Ekbalco, were plummeting into the depths of depression at Newcastle after their good horse had injured himself so badly when falling in the Fighting Fifth Hurdle that he had to be put down. Rescinding bankruptcy order

Commissioners of Inland Revenue v Falconer and Others Before Sir John Donaldson, Master of the Rolls, Lord Justice May and Lord Justice Dillon

[Judgment delivered November3]
Where in bankruptcy proceedings an order dismissing a bankruptcy petition had been made at the instance of the petitioning creditor, the court could subsequently rescind the order dismissing the petition and make receiving orders against the debtors even though such a course of acton was opposed by the actitioning creditor.

The Court of Appeal so stated in dismissing an appeal by the petitioning creditor, the Comissioners of Inland Revenue, against an order of Mr Registrar Dewhurst made on February 11, 1982 on the application of the trustee in bankruptcy, Mr G. D. Falconer.

Section 108 of the Bankruptcy Act 1914 provides: "(1) Every court having jurisdiction on bankruptcy under this Act may review, rescind or vary any order by it under its bankruptcy jurisdiction". Mr John Mummery for the Inland Revenue: Mr Edward Bannister for the trustee in bankruptcy.

LORD JUSTICE DILLON said that the debtors carried on a plant contracting and construction business in Lincolnshire. They became indepted to the Inland Revenue who recovered judgment against them and served bankruptcy notices. The debtors failed to comply with the bankruptcy notices and the petition was presented in the High Court by the Revenue.

The petition was first heard before Mr Registar Parbury on May 12, 1980. On that date a cheque for £40,000 was handed to the Revenue the petition was adjourned to July 8 when the registrar was told by the Revenue that the £40,000 was being held in trust, a phrase which must mean in trust pending the outcome

The petition was then adjourned ultimately came before Mr Registrar Dewhurst on February 17, 1981, By that date no further payment had been made to the Revenue in respect of their debt but there had been other important develop-ments. On November 8, 1980 the three debtors had committed a further act of bankruptcy in relian on which a trade creditor who had recovered judgment against them presented a bankruptcy petition in the Scunthorpe County Court.

A receiving order against all three debtors was made on the county court petition on December 30, 1980 and all three debtors were adjudicated bankrupt on the county court petition on January 23, 1981. The first respondent, Mr Falconer, was appointed trustee in bankruptcy of all three bankrupts in place of the Official Receiver, Before February 17, 1981 the Official Receiver had been aware leave to withdraw a petition, the enue; Swepstone, Waish & Son for that the Revenue's petition was pending in the High Court and make a receiving order, if satisfied ham.

On February 17, 1981 on the court, having on the proper exercise adjourned hearing of the Revenue's if its judgment refused leave to High Court petition, Mr Registrar withdraw a petition, were, without cooperation from the petitioning Revenue, dismissed that petition creditor who wanted the petition. There was nobody there to oppose withdrawn, unable to do anything that course. Subsequently, the trustee in bankruptcy learned about the £40,000 and the order of February 17. The trustee called on the existence of the county court but the Revenue refused.

he could not effectively claim the court to refuse leave to withdraw the £40,000 so long as the order of Revenue's petition. It was common February 17 stood. Accordingly he ground that no other creditors who rebruary 17 stood. Accordingly he ground that no other creations who made an application to the High happened to come forward on Court for the order of February 17 February 17, 1981 could have been to be rescinded under section 108 of substituted for the Revenue as the Bankruptcy Act 1914, for receiving orders to be made against

Mr Mummery therefore submitall three debtors instead, and for the High Court proceedings to be transferred to the Scunthorpe County Court and consolidated with the bankruptcy proceedings

That application came before Mr Registrar Dewhurst on February 11, 1982 and he acceded to it. By his order, which was the order now appealed against, he rescinded his order of February 17, 1981, whereby he had dismissed the Revenue's petition and he made receiving orders against all three debtors. He later. The wording of section 108(1) was however unqualified and the general comment in Williams on Bankruptcy 19th edition at p457 that "the jurisdiction to rebear and rescind or vary orders made in the exercise of bankruptcy jurisdiction is, in a proper case, almost without the order of February 17, 1981. The money was held in trust is, in a proper case, almost without limit" appeared to be justified.

The nub of the Revenue's appeal was that it was wrong for the registrar to have rescinded his earlier orders and made receiving orders for the avowed purpose of bringing the $40,000 wild ye. of the county court bankruptcy which only related back to November 8, 1980, the date of the relevant act of bankruptcy.

Section 5(7) of the 1914 Act provided that a creditor's petition should not, after presentment, be withdrawn without the leave of the court. In Re Bebro [[1900] 2 QB 316, 321) it was stated that such leave to withdraw a petition should be given only after an exercise of judgment as to whether the case was a proper one for withdrawal His a proper one for withdrawal. His Lordship agreed.

But, in his Lordship's judgment, because the court had to deal with the petition in one of the ways indicated in section 5, it followed that if the court in the proper exercise of its Judgment refused.

Lord Justice May and the Master of the Rolls agreed.

His Lordship saw great force in that submission if the £40,000 had been paid to the Revenue outright and unconditionally in May 1981. orders against all three debtors. He subsequently ordered transfer to the county court.

At first sight it seemed startling that the registrar should have might then be wrong for the dismissing the petition nearly a year later. The wording of section 108(1) well before the county court bankruptcy related back, it might then be wrong for the dismissing the petition nearly a year later. registrar to nave rescinded his carrier orders and made receiving orders for the avowed purpose of bringing the £40,000 paid to the Revenue in May 1980 within the net of the county court has been adjudicated bankrupt on the county court petition, prefer to perfect the Revenue's title, instead of leavings much of the £40,000 as had been provided by the debt as provided by the debtors, available for the general body of their creditors in the course of their bankruptcy? So long as the £40,000 was held in trust the debtors had a contingent interest in it. That interest vested in their trustee under the county court bankrupicy and there was no reason why the trustees should be deprived of it.

In his Lordship's judgment, the registrar had erred on February 17.
1981 when he gave the Revenue he corrected his error by making the LORD JUSTICE OLIVER, givthan a revenue nature. ing the judgment of the court, said that it was accepted that, once the Mr Mathew, however, relied on the two factors which had appealed to the special commissioners, namely, the analogy of the cases to facts were ascertained, the question whether a particular expenditure was of a revenue or capital nature which they referred and the absence, as they found, of any asset of an was one of law and one the answer enduring nature. In the court's view, the cases did the application of one single ailembracing test.

not provide any compulsive or convincing analogy which pointed If one started with the first of the matters referred to by Mr Justice Dixon in Sun Newspapers Lid v Federal Commissioner of Taxation ((1938) 61 C L R 337, 363) namely Indeed it appeared more nearly analogous to Tucker v Granada Motorway Services Ltd ([1971] 1 WLR 683) where a payment in commutation of a variable rent in the character of the advantage sought, the general advantage was simply that of improving the company's trade. But that could not was held to be a capital payment. So, in the instant case, if both the purpose and the effect of the transaction were analysed, what emerged from the 1978 agreement was a clearly identifiable and enduring advantage - no doubt an advantage which enabled the company to trade better and thus increase its profits, but one of a capital nature in the sense that it enabled the company to utilize its capital assets in a way in which it could not have utilized them before and to continue to enjoy the benefit of instalment repayment of the loan without the disadvantages imposed on it by the 1975 agreement.

Prior to the agreement the company had been disabled from raising further capital on the security of any of its assets. After the agreement its Denny mill was a allable free from charge as were a., its other fixed and current assets will probably have already encountered one or more of the major graduate recruitment directories which are distributed, free of charge on demand, from university and polytechnic careers services. What they may not be aware of is that their choice of directory is rapidly becoming the centre of a contro-versial debate between employers. the careers service and the principa publishers concerned - a debate which has led to many services being

To understand the issues involved, it is necessary to take a close look at each of the directories and the differences in approach and content which exist between them.

increasingly selective about the directories they choose to distribute

There are four main contenders: GO (published by the New Opportunity Press) and DOG (published by VNU Business Publications) both of these are produced by commercial publishers and contain details of employers who are specifically intending to recruit graduate trainees in the coming season. The employers pay for their entries in much the same way as they pay for recruitment advertising. Subject to set standards of style and accuracy, they have absolute control over the information the entries contain and the way in whic it its written. GET (published by Hobson/CRAC)

- Hobson's Press is the commercial publisher linked to the Careers Research and Advisory Centre, a registered educational charity financed by member subscriptions and donations, licensing income and project sponsorship. In addition to separate employer entries similar to those which appear in GO and DOG, GET also contains a comprehensive directory of employers in the appendix. The directory is compiled by CRAC itself using a data-based system of reference paid for by the centre's subscription and not directly by the employers which appear in the ROGET is published on behalf of the Association of Graduate Careers Advisory Services (AG-CAS) by the Central Services Unit, a non-profit making body supported by subscriptions from all universities and polytechies in the British Isles. The basic entries are compiled by the unit using a data-base system similar to the employed by CRAC and they are offered to employers on a free basis. Crucial to the controversy, however, is the fact that employers are charged for any additional space they choose to take out in the entry.

careers services themselves, many individual services have independently begun to reduce or restrict the numbers of the other directories they choose to distribute. Given that the services are the major, and in some cases, the only way of distributing the material directly to the students on the campus, this has caused a predictable storm of protest from the publishers concerned.

The reasons given by individual services have tended to very greatly. many say that because the entries in the commercial directories are compiled months before publication, the estimates of vacancy requirements which appear are out of date by the time the students read them. They emphasize that, by comparison, ROGET is not a list of vacancies but a carefully compiled directory giving objective and impartial information about the employers covered.

This was reiterated by AGCAS's new chairman, Robert Porrer. He said: "ROGET was conceived in 1975 by a group of careers advisers who felt the need for a concise and comprehensive reference source on graduate employers, and in particular one that would make available to students information on the many employers who did not issue recruitment literature to all careers services or advertise in the careers directories.

"ROGET has been developed as a compendium with a role different to that of the main commercial directories and is not designed to give vacancy information. Vacancies - especially in these uncertain times can rarely be predicted 15 months before a graduate is available for employment."

Other services say that, with four directories now available for students. it is no longer reasonable for them to be expected to handle, store and distribute all of them in the sme quantity as in the past. A few concede however, that this argument is often being used as a convenient way to favour ROGET above the other directories.

"Everybody, particularly commercial publishers, are well aware of the jungle-like approach of the commercial world and it must be recognised that employers only have a limited amount of funds to invest in directory entries", commented Brian Steptoe, joint director of the University of London Careers Advisory Service. "We, the careers service, are exploiting our semi-monopolistic access to students in order to ensure that ROGET will become a viable product - with the caveat that members of AGCAS feel that it is a better source of information than the others. To suggest otherwise would be totally naive.

The commercial publishers concede many of the points put forward by the careers services. They agree that ROGET serves a different With the development of ROGET, a purpose to their own publication, but directory produced on behalf of the argue that it should therefore complement rather than replace them. Ail of them would be prepared to arrange some form of staggered distribution to ease services' logistical problems and two out of the three would consider the payment of reasonable handling charges to compensate for the problems of distributing their direc-

But the continued restriction placed on the distribution of their publi-cations, often in favour of ROGET, has fuelled the sceptical view that reers advisers' ability to judge the relative benefits of the various directories objectively is being stretched to the limit by the financial gain the service as a whole will make if ROGET is distributed in larger

"In the words of Mark Lane, DOG's publisher: "Careers advisers are still living in the Victorian age. They feel that if you are a professional, somehow this is good with a capital 'g'. If you are commercial, somehow this is bad with a capital 'b'. They want to maintain their image of themselves as professionals and stick to the concept that 'nanny knows best'. But at the same time, for all their protestations to the contrary, they are also very interested in the money ROGET can earn the service."

Robert Porrer dismisses these allegations. He says: "Whether a university or polytechnic Careers Service distributes any directories is entirely a matter for the individual service. AGCAS has consistently made it clear that it has no intention of creating monopoly; indeed careers advisers value the commercial directories because they are different, and make them available to students.

"The question has been raised as to whether the desire to ensure a sound financial basis for ROGET has led some careers advisers to be more restrictive over the distribution of the commercial directories. I do not personally see these issues as directly linked - what many careers advisers believe is that a rapidly changing graduate job market demands a different approach to employer and vacancy information."

There is no doubt that a substantial majority of careers services would endorse Mr Porter's comments. But it is clear that a small but influential minority do not.

In the absence of any independant findings on the way in which students use the various directories, it is difficult to draw any absolute conclusion about carreers advisers' misgivings concerning the commercial publications. But, with employers increasingly unwilling to place entries in all four directories and the commercial publishers already attempting to bypass the careers services by direct distribution to the academic departments, the issure is unlikely to quietly disappear.

He was followed by Prince Andrew, the Duke of Kent and Prince Michael of Kent. Further wreaths were laid on behalf of other members of the royal family who watched from a balcony.

Mrs Margaret Thatcher led the political leaders, laying a wreath on behalf of the Government. Mr Neil Kinnock, at the ceremony for the first time as leader of the Oppo-sition, followed, then made way for Mr David Steel,

Dr David Owen of the Social Democratic Party, who was refused a place at the Cenotaph alongside the other party leaders, was in Plymouth and laid a wreath at the city's war

He declined to comment on his absence from Whitehall, saying: "I am not prepared to talk about politics today. This is neither the time nor the place. There are times when even politics must be put to bed and this is one of them." He did, however, remark on the decision to review the position next year. "Let's hope wiser counsel prevails next The day brought a crop of protests including one from war widows who laid a floral cross at the Cenotaph after the official service. Mrs Iris Strange, president of British War Widows and Associates, said: "We rep-resent the widows of the first and second world wars and we are seeking parity with those widowed since 1973, who are entitled to larger benefits." Down the road at Parliament Square, 26 anti-nuclear prosquare, were arrested during a mock "die in". The Peace Anonymous group had hoped to stage the demonstration at the Cenotaph but strict security kept them away.

The women at Greenham ignored reports that the missiles may arrive at the base tomorrow and instead held their own Remembrance Day

At 11am they formed circles outside each of the base's eight cates, held hands and stood in illence. Then they grouped at the main gate for a slow march carrying placards saying: "Who killed Karen Silkwood?" to the beat of a candle on a tambourine. The march took two hours to travel 200 yards.

Karen Silkwood was an American nuclear analyst who was mysteriously killed in a road accident when on her way to give a journalist documentary evidence of safety violations at the power station where she worked. All her papers had disappeared from her car when her body was

Letter from Leipzig

Where East meets pre-war West

They serve "Mephisto-pheles meat" in the Auerbach cellars, where a chunk of the Faust legend is set. And round the walls of this now rather ordinary case scenes from Goethe's play depict the drunken students, the encounters with the devil.

Both food and atmosphere hold fewer temptations nowadays, however; it is one of many cases near the ancient market-place where you need Mephistopheles' cunning to find a place among the carousing students in the evenings.

Watching the hopefuls mill around the door reminded me so much of Russia Indeed Leipzig, so rich in German history, legend and music, is a visible symbol of the influence of the Soviet Union and of the German Democratic Republic's fidelity to the Soviet

The architecture tells it all. The magnificent old Rathaus and similar structures from the age of Luther, with steeply sloping roofs and tiers of dormer windows, dominate the market-place under state protection, a point of pride in a city that still salvaged something from Allied bomb-

But the buildings of nineteenth century bourgeois afflu-ence are less honoured. The proprietors' names have been removed, the fancy Victorian tracery work left to crumble or roughly patched up, and instead functional descriptions announce the functional goods on sale inside.

The new state combines are housed in vast windowless shopping centres or in con-crete panelled blocks that only a believer in proletarian starkness could find attractive.

The new city of Leipzig does not believe in little alleyways, boutiques or inti-maties of scale: the tower blocks and squares, fountains and flowerbeds are vast rectangular monuments to post-war socialist redevelopment, where the preference for the collective over the individ-ual is expressed in physical

Much else had a Soviet feel: the slogens, of course, and posters against Nato missiles on almost every shop window; the many Soviet officers in the streets, and those of the GDR Army who wear similar long. flared greatcoats; the loudspeakers errected on street speakers errected on suffer corners where the masses waiting for their trains are edified with national radio broadcasts; the overheated public building-(hotter than in West Germany) and the corner who insist you sour old crones who insist you leave your cloak in the cloakroom each time. Like Moscow, Leipzig had a large population of third world students. And, similarly, young people in jeans and anoraks boast rebellious symbols of the West: long hair and plastic carrier-bags from West German shops. Young and old carry the inevitable string bags, in case an unexpected delivery turns up in the shops.

But what a difference in the shops themselves! Russian tourists - and there are many are open-mouthed at the wealth of food elegant clothes, well-made blankets kitchenware, toys, precision instru-ments and hifi equipment. The windows are tastfully stocked.

Vine disease

The Central Office of Information have issued a warning against complacency to viticulturists, who may dismiss phylloxera as a historical disaster which wiped out many of Emrope's vines in the 19th century. If they have planted grape vines this year they should check their plants carefully for signs of the disease before leaf fall. Grape phylloxera is an aphid-like insect that damages vines in many countries but had been eradicated here. The most notable sympton is prominent galls, on the underside of the leave, which may be as much as one-quarter of an inch in dameter and are green, sometimes flushed with red. Do not try to destroy the infestation but phone the nearest Ministry of Agriculture office.

South Wales trains

British Rail is increasing the number of daily train services running between South Wales and Paddington to 23 each way from today to reduce the traffic conges-tion on the Severn Bridge. The one additional train leaves Cardiff at 8.48am Newport at 9.01, Bristol Parkway at 9.25, arriving Paddingion at 10.56 (on Saturdays the train will start from Swansea). Return will be at 6.17pm from Paddington, arriving Bristol Parkway at 7.46, Newport at 8.09 and Cardiff at 8.26. Bargain Saver fares can be used on this train. Prices are £17 from Swanses; £15 from Cardiff and Newport and £12 from Bristol

The papers

"There is no need for Mrs Thatcher to look too hard for examples of the Victorian values she cherishes," the Daily Mirror says. "In London's East End, there are 2,500 of them. They are the raginade sweat shops where thousands of women work for a pittance in unsafe and unhealthy conditions... To Mrs Thatcher, Victorian values mean happy families living in Comfort. But for most people living in Victorian times, the reality was misery at home and even worse misery at work." What the sweat shop workers need are the benefits most workers already enjoy.

The Prime Minister had grasped the uncomfortable truth that Britain

The Prime Minister had grasped the mecomfortable truth that Britain now had two superpowers to worry about instead of one, The Sunday Mirror said yesterday. The atherican invasion of Grenada had made Mirs Thatcher realize that the Resgan Administration could no longer be trusted. She might even regret accepting United States cruise missiles.

The Observer said that the Government had badly miscalcu-lated the state of public opinion about control of cruise missiles. It was now forced to question American good will on the missile as well as on Grande and Lebanon.
It was now clear that a change to dual British and American control of the missiles would do much to allay public misgivings about them in Britain.
